

Director-in-Charge Note

This too shall pass

Seyed Mostafa Seyed Hossieni Tezerjani

Yazd Cardiovascular Research Center, Afshar Hospital, Shahid Sadoughi University of Medical Sciences, Yazd, Iran

Hope is the beating heart of medicine. In the history of mankind, whenever science and hope combine, humans have taken a further step toward absolute peace and calm. As for vitamin K and penicillin, which rose like a phoenix from the ashes of the World War II, and became the miracle drug healing human wounds.

However, today's world faces various crises.

Today's world suffers from inequality, hostility and devastation.

Coronavirus has touched every corner of the planet. To go through this bleak times, today, more than any other times, humanity needs medicine and hope.

Hope for bright future and good days.

Hope for healing wounds and pains.

Hope for all people live in peace and calm.

Hope for surviving.

Hope for living.

And we rise from the ashes of hopelessness and inequality.

Just through hope, nothing more.

